

Preparing for Life and Career © 2013
Chapter 10: Getting the Job You Want

Copyright Goodheart-Willcox Co., Inc.

Across

2. A document written by one of your references you can show to any prospective employer testifying to your abilities.
4. A meeting between an employer and a job applicant.
5. A short history of your education, qualifications, and work experience.
6. An organized collection of your work showcasing your talents and skills.
7. Recognized associations that unite and inform people who work in the same occupation or industry.
8. A letter that accompanies your résumé expressing interest in a position and providing more information about your qualifications.

Down

1. Making contacts with people who may be able to help you find a job.
3. People who know you and your work habits well, but are not relatives.