

Adventures in Food and Nutrition! © 2016
Chapter 3: Your Nutrition Toolbox—Glossary acesulfame K. A type of sugar substitute sold in the United States.

aspartame. A type of sugar substitute sold in the United States.

Dietary Guidelines for Americans. A set of recommendations that can help you choose a nutritious diet.

empty-calorie foods. Foods that provide small amounts of vitamins and minerals per calorie.

monk fruit extract. A type of sugar substitute sold in the United States.

MyPlate. A tool that displays key parts of a nutritious diet.

nutrient-dense foods. Foods that provide a large amount of vitamins and minerals compared to the calories.

saccharin. A type of sugar substitute sold in the United States.

salt substitute. A product that contains the mineral potassium instead of sodium; used to help people reduce their sodium intake.

stevia. A type of sugar substitute sold in the United States.

sucralose. A type of sugar substitute sold in the United States.

sugar substitute. A product that sweetens foods without adding calories.